Summer Is a Special Time

For people who live and work elsewhere, the words "summer on Cape Cod" may evoke images of relaxing, of children playing on the beach, of vacations and a welcome break from busy schedules.

For those of us who live and raise our families here, however, summer is likely to bring additional challenges and responsibilities as we attempt to balance work with parenting. It can require a lot of juggling and planning to meet different needs within the household.

School is out, and children need to be safe while enjoying time outside a classroom. Working parents are trying to keep everyone happy: their employers who are coping with staff shortages, their children who are needing rides to activities and programs, their friends and family who are wanting to visit.

Crowded stores and congested roads don't make life any easier.

When it all feels too much, take a breath and let go of some of the pressures. We think of summer as a special time of year, and we often place high demands on ourselves. We may have high expectations of everything we will do and accomplish. If those expectations are unrealistic it just creates stress, for ourselves and our family.

When we are trying to fit too many events into the day, the pleasure of the season gets lost. Making the most of summer starts to feel like a burden, another responsibility.

One year when I had a job that was difficult for me, I found that I was arriving at work anticipating in advance all the things that might go wrong that day. I realized this attitude was making my job harder, not easier, and I came up with a plan. Every day when I started work, I told myself: "I will do my best, and it will be good enough." The job didn't get any easier, but I was more accepting of my own efforts.

As we move through this busy season, we can try to cut ourselves some slack. If one of our plans isn't working out, it's OK to let it go. We're all doing our best, and that is good enough. It's time to enjoy this summer.

Attention: Breastfeeding Moms

Inflammatory Breast Cancer (IBC) is a rare but quickly spreading type of breast cancer. See your primary care doctor or gynecologist right away if you have swelling, redness, retracted nipples, and tenderness, pain or itchiness in the breast. If you have any of these symptoms, don't ignore them. If you are pregnant or breastfeeding, they may be signs of IBC, or they may indicate a breast infection.

If your symptoms don't get better quickly, ask to see a breast specialist and be persistent. Early detection of IBC is essential and can save your life. For information about this fast-moving cancer, visit marniesarmy.org to learn about a young Cape Cod mother who didn't find out in time that she had this aggressive cancer.

Cape Cod Children's Place News

More Than Fun and Games

Much of our work at Cape Cod Children's Place is about creating safe spaces for all families, those created by choice, chance, or circumstance, to connect, to have fun, to learn, to be together. This newsletter provides information about family hikes, puppet shows, baby yoga, and much more. And our work is about more than fun and games: we also provide parent/caregiver education and support, home visiting, coaching, and early education and care. All these programs are essential for families to grow strong.

We are also committed to bringing about the meaningful change that children and families in our community deserve. We refuse to accept the status quo. Together, we aim to create a resilient, thriving community where every family has the opportunity to flourish.

Our staff are deeply passionate and committed to this transformative work, and we are constantly seeking opportunities to enhance our services. In April we welcomed Oana Andris (Teacher Assistant) and Andra Walford (Teacher) to our team, and as of June our infant room is now open 5 days a week. We look forward to keeping our community informed as we continue to move forward.

Thank you!

We are grateful to the Michael H. Cole Charitable Giving Foundation Golf Tournament and Fund Raising Day, held May 6 and sponsored by Cape Associates and the Cape Cod Cooperative Bank. By partnering with them and obtaining auction and raffle items, we were the recipient of a percentage of the monies brought in by those items.

Thank you to everyone who helped to make our third annual Evening of Art on June 18 a success: our host, Chequessett Yacht and Country Club in Wellfleet; the artists who donated their works; Sumptuous Catering for the food; musician Jordan Renzi; and our Resource Development Committee with special thanks to Diana Garey for her role in planning and organizing the event. We are grateful to the sponsors of the evening: Seamen's Bank, Chequessett Club, Cape Associates, Roderick's Payroll & Bookkeeping, La Tanzi Spaulding & Landreth, Kerry Insurance, and The Cooperative Bank of Cape Cod.
